the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion, and the number of people aged 65 and over has increased from 0.2 billion to 0.5 billion (United Nations, 1999).

There are a number of reasons why the world population is ageing. One of the main reasons is that the number of people who are surviving to old age has increased. This is due to a number of factors, including improved medical care, better nutrition, and a decline in the number of people who are dying from infectious diseases. Another reason is that the number of people who are having children is decreasing. This is due to a number of factors, including a decline in the number of people who are having children at a young age, and a decline in the number of people who are having children at all.

The ageing of the world population has a number of implications. One of the main implications is that there will be a need for more people to work in order to support the growing number of people who are retired. This will have a number of implications for the economy, including a need for more people to work in the service sector, and a need for more people to work in the manufacturing sector. Another implication is that there will be a need for more people to live in retirement homes, and a need for more people to live in nursing homes.

The ageing of the world population is a major challenge for the world. It is a challenge that will require a number of solutions, including a need for more people to work, a need for more people to live in retirement homes, and a need for more people to live in nursing homes.
