the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased by 1.2 billion (United Nations 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 21st century. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) states that the child is entitled to the highest standards of health care and that the child's best interests are to be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children.

The World Health Organization (WHO) has identified the need for a new approach to the care of children with chronic conditions (WHO 1998).

The aim of this paper is to discuss the need for a new approach to the care of children with chronic conditions and to propose a new model of care.

The paper is organized as follows. First, the need for a new approach to the care of children with chronic conditions is discussed. Then, a new model of care is proposed. Finally, the implications of the new model of care are discussed.

1. Introduction

The number of children with chronic conditions has increased significantly in the 1990s. This is due to a number of factors, including improved survival rates for children with chronic conditions and an increase in the number of children with chronic conditions who are surviving into adulthood.
